PREVIEW OF A HOMECOMING

The two young soldiers reported to have visited John L. Lewis in Washington to tell the president of United Mine Workers what they and their buddies thought about wartime strikes have given a spokesman for the union a chance to stage a preview of organized labor policy for dealing with disgruntled soldiers. Whether Mr. Lewis did or did not in the meantime sustain blows from his visitors is beside the point.

According to the UMW spokesmen who took charge of publicity for the incident, the visitors were told in a "fatherly" manner about "war profits and millionaires" that miners always stopped work when they didn't have a contract... that no railroads had stopped running and no munitions plants had stopped operating because of mine shutdowns. According to the same spokesmen, the visitors then left quietly.

Whether they were convinced that miners should have quit mining coal in a war emergency remains to be seen, but that, too, probably is beside the point. The point is that the preview indicates the master strategy of dealing with soldiers' post-war resentment of work stoppages will call for the great American standby of blaming it all on their employers.

ELMER DAVIS GOES AFTER A STORY

Other Washington correspondents can be excused for laughing if Elmer Davis, director of the war information, tries his luck at finding out whether Franklin D. Roosevelt is ready to announce his candidacy for renomination and reelection yet. This would seem instructions to designate no man as a candidate for to be the first move under his agency's new standing the presidential nomination unless he so declares himself.

Mr. Roosevelt has not declared himself, even though no one doubts his intentions. Therefore, he cannot be identified as a candidate. On the Republican side, only Gov. Bricker and Wendell L. Willkie have declared themselves. If Mr. Davis could get this matter straightened out and compile an official list of who else is running he would be in line for a Pulitzer prize.

VINSON AND ROSENMAN

Two men are being mentioned as possible sources of President Roosevelt's veto attack on congress—Fred M. Vinson, director of the office of economic stabilization, and Samuel I. Rosenman, confidential secretary to the President. Their possible connection with the attack is being considered apart from the probability that Mr. Roosevelt, himself, was the source.

It adds up to an incredible situation. The Constitution says the chief executive can return a bill to congress with his objections; it does not give him authority to voice the objections of anyone else. It certainly does not authorize him to let a veto message be used by anyone, including himself, for an attack on congress.

The apparent aim of all officials concerned in the attack and the rebuttal is to patch things up and get the people interested in something else. Things are suddenly quiet along the Potomac. Before the attention of the people is diverted to something else, however, it is proper for every person who takes representative democracy seriously to keep wondering what Mr. Vinson and Mr. Rosenman possibly could have been doing writing veto messages and why, if they had nothing to do with this one, so many Washington commentators think they did.

IN THE OTHER DIRECTION

In the almost unanimous opinion of income taxpayers, this year's form reached an absurd extreme of complexity. The danger is that the political reaction to the public's criticism of the form may carry it too far in the opposite direction.

It is no more equitable to levy income taxes without certain allowances for what is done with income after it is earned than to levy real estate taxes, for instance, on a square foot basis. Any attempt to simplify tax forms by eliminating deductions for charity, unusual medical expenses, or payment of interest on loans would be a violation of the ability-to-pay principle which underlies the income tax system.

Much of the public resentment of the forms this year arises from their inclusion of the red tape incidental to the so-called "forgiveness feature." It will be gone next year. So will the victory tax credits and the earned income credit. If these complications were to be joined in limbo by some of the obscure language used both in the forms and on the instruction sheet, that would be simplification enough.

Otherwise, a year from now there might be a bitter complaint from some millions of taxpayers waking up to the hard fact that they have been tax-simplified out of their equitable rights.

END OF THE TRAIL FOR FINLAND

Russia's apparent confidence that Finland has reached the end of the trail with Germany and must inevitably drop out of the war is explained by the gradual disintegration of the German front in the Leningrad area. Finland will be the first of the German satellite allies to succumb to Russian power.

Objectively, the armistice terms offered by Russia, while hard on the Finns, are more lenient than might have been expected. The obvious catch in them is the Russian demand that German troops in Finland must be interned, with Russian aid if necessary. Unless the troops are withdrawn in the immediate future, that seems to mean Finland will become a battleground, since it is unlikely that the Finns, themselves, can capture their allies any more successfully than the Italians were able to regain control of their country after surrender. The decision rests with the German high command as to whether it wants to fight in Finland, with the Russians threatening to cut communications with that country.

Finnish history in this century is a record of attempts to live on the periphery of the Russian orbit without losing Finnish identity. The Finns have been tempted to look to Germany for their salvation. In 1944, it is evident that in the future they are to be dominated by Russia as the victor in a war that Germany could not win, though not evident yet what the domination will entail in loss of national identity.

THE STARS SAY:

For Sunday, March 5

SUNDAY'S horoscope encourages the use of the Sabbath Day liberty to engage in the conventional cultural, spiritual and social preoccupations rather than in routine activities. In all affairs there is a certain danger of overdoing, with impetuous, indulgent, emotional and extravagant excesses, which might mean regret. With conservation of energies and substance there may be a pleasant and happy day.

For the Birthday

Those whose birthday it is may encounter a day in which the proclivities may be in all sorts of extravagance and outlay, indulgences and emotional impetuities that might combine to create loss and regret, with little accumulation of resources or physical energies. With care, thrift and good judgment there is fair promise of increased fortunes, business growth and expansion of personal security and well being. Care for health and shun strife.

A child born on this day is likely to have occasional loss and reversal in its affairs, mainly because of an expansive and indulgent proclivity to unwise handling of funds.

For Monday, March 6

Monday's astrological forecast offers excellent opportunity for productive and progressive work, especially where new, original or experimental creative endeavor seeks outlet. This is likely to attract influential persons ready to assist in development, capitalization and promotion. But there is a menace of disagreement through sarcasm, caustic speech or over-arrogant nervous state. Be calm, conserve the energies and emotions for happy results.

Birthday Forecast

Those whose birthday it is may look for a good year for expressing their originality, ingenuity and uncommon creative ability, through the substantial cooperation of influential personages. However these must be handled with finesse, as sarcastic or smart speech may give offense or begot antagonism. Emotional upsets or nervous strain may be at back of this, so guard the health and spirit.

A child born on this day will be gifted with much original talent, with inventive genius or rare skills, attracting aid from powerful persons. Its danger is from over-emotional or nervous outbursts.

Children's Sleeping Habits

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.
THE MOST up-to-date pediatricians do not seem to have any modern ideas about sleep habits of children. Nature settled that for them, and the babies of Mr. and Mrs. Keep-in-Style, around the corner are doing the same thing today, so far as their sleep patterns are concerned, as baby Cain and baby Abel in the suburbs of the Garden of Eden.

Dr. Clendening will answer questions of general interest only, and then only through his column.

Sleep is almost continuous during the first weeks of life. The baby awakens only for food and bathing. The nervous system is not fully developed, and the newborn is protected from wakeful sounds. Wakefulness and restlessness in the newborn are distinctly abnormal and the causes must be discovered.

The sleep schedule for older children: second and third months—20 hours a day; from fourth to sixth month—16 to 18 hours a day; from sixth to twelfth month—12 hours at night, 2 hour nap in the morning and 2 hour nap in the afternoon.

Child's Sleeping Schedule

During the second year the baby should sleep 12 hours at night and have at least one two hour nap during the day. Children three to five years old—12 hours at night and an afternoon nap; six to eight years—12 hours at night, eight to ten years—11 hours at night; ten years to adolescence—10 to 11 hours at night. These figures are meant to refer to actual sleep and not just the time spent in bed. It is certainly better not to wait until a baby is tired and irritable before putting it to bed.

The amount of sleep a child, as well as an adult, gets is an individual matter, and if in his waking hours he seems healthy and energetic and up to par the schedule given above can be shifted to conform to personal taste.

Drowsiness or excessively long sleeping periods usually do not mean anything alarming. Now that the days of soothing syrups are over the family doctor doesn't have to suspect that the baby has a narcotic habit.

Causes of Sleeplessness

Sleeplessness may be due to either physical or mental causes. The physical causes are mostly associated with food. They are: Wrong food, too little food, too much food, too little water, feedings not given at regular times, or feeding too often.

Other physical causes are too much or too little clothing, uncomfortable clothing, not enough fresh air, sickness.

The psychological factors are—too much excitement at bedtime, putting the baby to sleep when he is not tired, or giving food when he is not hungry. For such sleeping problems the treatment is to induce a state of relaxation—lure the baby from active play an hour before bedtime, then a warm bath, perhaps a simple rubdown, quiet play in bed with the lights dimmed.

Night terrors, if severe or uncontrollable are usually sufficient cause for a medical consultation.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

H. D.—What sort of a reaction does an injection of wax under the skin have? Does it coagulate or disperse into the blood stream?

Answer—Wax injections have been used by some plastic surgeons, but mostly have been given up by the best ones, because they so often react as a foreign body with pain, redness and swelling at the site. These "paraffin tumors" usually had to be removed six months or a year after injection. The wax does not go into the blood stream.

P. W.—My mother has diabetes and takes 10 units of insulin three times a week. Would vitamin pills be harmful for her?

Answer—Vitamin D, a diabetic, or one taking insulin, no harm and just as much good as they do any other kind of person.

New Robe Gets Judge Tangled With His Chair

ST. LOUIS—Federal justice is wearing black satin now. And it got tangled up in a chair caster. It was like this. Federal judges in all districts were ordered to put on black satin robes—in the interest of judicial dignity. Local federal judge George H. Moore and Ruby M. Hulen donned black robes when the order came out.

Judge Moore is known to have whispered a bit against the new outfit. Shortly after his maiden courtroom venture in black satin, he was seen talking earnestly and quietly with a deputy clerk. Then the two went to work as unobtrusively as possible getting Judge Moore's robe disentangled from a courtroom chair caster.

LEAVES FROM A WAR CORRESPONDENT'S NOTEBOOK

By OLEN W. CLEMENTS (Substituting For Hal Boyle)
SOMEWHERE IN NEW GUINEA, March 4—Tales from the South Seas:

Some of the boys are still chuckling over the first air raid. Sgt. Michael Ratkovich of Chicago underwerent. Ratkovich, who weighs better than 300 pounds, had started a foxhole but did not have it finished when the alarm sounded. Somehow he managed to cram his big frame inside the small hole, but when the all clear sounded he couldn't get out. It took six men several minutes to pull him free.

Almost the same thing happened to tiny Lieut. Winfred Diehl, an Army nurse from Allentown, Pa. Miss Diehl, slightly less than five feet tall jumped into a deep hole with other nurses. When the raid was over the other nurses clamored out, leaving tiny Miss Diehl in the hole, unable to scale the high wall. It was an hour later that her cries were heard and she was rescued.

Pvt. James P. Wright of Saginaw, Mich., (now a lieutenant) had two full colonels dig a foxhole for him north of the Owen Stanley mountains.

Wright and several other enlisted men were decoding messages when a Jap air raid became imminent. The enlisted men had to continue their work and the only two men to dig foxholes were the colonels. They sweated over their shovels and finished the foxhole in time for the G. I.'s to jump in as Jap bombers came over.

He's a bit sloppy in dress, this G. I. cook called "Bull Baker." His pants always bag at the seat and his overseas cap always is askew. But beneath his khaki shirt there

He's a private in a Signal Corps company and he hails from Minnesota. He gets his nickname from the dish he serves most often, bully-beef.

"Bull Baker" believes in practical gifts to the fair sex. So when the southern cross cast its romantic spell on his tortured soul, he bought his Australian girl friend a gift—a brand new set of false teeth. Many South Sea girls have false teeth because of the lack of calcium in their diet.

The romance progressed. Then one day "Bull Baker" saw her out with another G. I.

He reclaimed the dentures and put the set on a box beside his cot. There they are yet.

THE LITTLE DOG BARKED by ANNE ROWE

CHAPTER FORTY

"You thought you could get away with it, didn't you?" Loring asked in the same even, expressionless tone. Looking straight ahead, pointing the gun straight ahead. I couldn't see from where I was sitting, at whom he was looking, at whom he was pointing the gun.

"You tried three times to murder my daughter, for the money you imagined you could swindle out of my estate, after my death. The first time old Mack got into the way. You killed him and ran away. The second time a small dog foiled you. The third time Mrs. Turner disturbed you—and poor Sandra discovered you were the killer. So you murdered her, to make sure she couldn't interfere with the fourth attempt you doubtless planned. But there won't be a fourth attempt. I'll see to it, you—murdering son—"

The accusing speech—the tall, tragic figure slowly lifting the gun. I was holding on to my pre-emptive perch, steeling myself for the explosion of the gun that was sure to come.

Then there was movement in the shadows, more felt than seen. And Inspector Pettengill, solid and reassuring, was standing beside Loring, wrenching the gun away.

"No, no, Mr. Loring! Not that way!" ordered the Inspector sternly. "The law is best."

His hand moved, almost imperceptibly. Bringing Sheriff Weymouth and Constable Corey from nowhere, signaling the sheriff to take over.

"In the name of the law," the gaunt old Sheriff began haltingly—stopped—and started over again with more assurance in his voice. "In the name of the law: I arrest you for the murder of Mack Ricker and Sandra Marshall, for two attempts on the life of Linda Loring, and for setting fire to the house of Dr. Gates."

And at the same moment Constable Corey reached out, and the handcuffs clicked on the wrists of—Orne Paulsen.

The whole scene was so unexpected, it was paralyzing. I think no one breathed—I know I didn't—for almost a full minute.

Until suddenly Paulsen asked ironically: "Are you insane, Sheriff? Arresting me for—?"

Inspector Pettengill answered for his local colleague.

"Ayah. Arresting you, Orne Paulsen—or if you like it better: Einar Loringsson, as named on your mother's passport when she brought you into the country twenty-one years ago. Seeing it's the law in her country—Norway—to take a woman's word for who is the father of her child, and tag it on to the kid's. You really believe you're Mr. Loring's son—or do you?"

"What if I do?" Paulsen sounded cool and composed. "What has that to do with your crazy accusation? Granted I was curious to meet the men I'd been taught to consider my father. Granted I'd hoped to become friends with him, and my supposed half-sister. That doesn't make me a murderer. Quite the contrary. I have protected Linda from the moment I realized who she was. She will tell you so herself, and so will Mrs. Turner and Wells Colby. Irony crept into his tone. "Oh, no, Inspector! You can't arrest me, just because you'd like to—solve your case. Really, I wouldn't. If I were you, I'd look very bad, in the papers—an arrest without sufficient evidence, without a wit—"

He broke off in the middle of the word with suddenly dilated eyes. Listening.

To a ferocious growling and shrill yelps. Coming nearer and nearer and growling in menace: Stray, in the arms of Sergeant Hatch!

The dog, still trussed up, but in a narrower strait, was fighting and wriggling frantically to get free. His puppy's face transformed into a mask of fury, his lips drawn back, his jaws snapping.

The witness Orne Paulsen had almost said didn't exist.

It broke Paulsen. First cowering, Orne moaned: "No—no! He's dead! Take him away!" And then turning into a raging beast, his face matching Stray's in ferocity, cursing and hitting out with his hand-cuffed arms. While Stray twice out of the Sergeant's grip with a quick jerk and made a leap for his enemy.

A foot shot out and its force would have caught the little dog if Bill Parris' fist hadn't shot out at the same moment, connecting with Paulsen's jaw.

The next instant three men and a dog were a tangled mass of flaying arms and kicking legs on the floor—Constable Corey having dutifully joined the fight, in an effort to keep his prisoner alive—and the theatre was echoing with a bedlam of blows, snarls and shrieks.

I must have moved during the uproar. For I suddenly found myself on the stage and in the thick of it. And then it was over.

Stray was panting in my arms. Paulsen was being led away between the considerably battered Constable Corey and Sergeant Hatch. Everybody else was talking, having hysterics, and asking questions.

And Linda . . .

Linda was standing on tiptoe, her arms reaching up around Loring's neck. Crying her heart out and gasping between sobs: "Father—father, darling! You were wonderful, wonderful!"

The rest of the way was a procession of small annoyances. The news of Orne Paulsen's arrest, coupled with the discovery that Linda Barolle was really Linda Loring.

and the murders and near-murders the culmination of an old scandal in Burns Loring's life, spread like wildfire, throwing all Fern Cove into a dither.

Everyone had an overwhelming urge to see the hero of the day, the "ferocious" dog who had "caught" the murderer for the police. And I was elected to satisfy the general curiosity.

My telephone shrilled incessantly. People I had never heard of invaded my privacy, begging for details of the murder investigation, of going incredibly at one small bundle of fur curled up at the foot of my bed on Josie Kilborn's sacrosanct new spread.

Three or four hours of this were more than enough. And when a new batch of sensation hunters burst in during the belated lunch I'd ordered to my room, I told them politely but firmly that I had nothing to say and would appreciate their prompt departure.

After that I had a chance to stretch out for a much-needed rest and mental review of the last days. With Stray cuddling up to me comfortably.

Far from knowing the answers to the many questions flung at me during the last hours, I was asking myself some.

Such as: What had made Inspector Pettengill suspect Paulsen? I'd been with Orne, and had talked to him, a lot. And hadn't noticed a thing pointing to his guilt. And: How, in three short days, had Pettengill managed to unearth Paulsen's whole past? Had the information come from Burns Loring exclusively?

The promise of enlightenment on these moot points came with Linda's return, late in the afternoon, from her father's house where she had probably been making a nuisance of herself with her spontaneous combustion of love and admiration, on this of all days.

Be that as it may, she was anxious to tell me the latest news:

Sandra's body would be brought back Sunday morning for funeral rites in Loring's large studio. And Inspector Pettengill had left temporarily, was taking his prisoner to the county jail in Clifford.

"He said to tell you he's going to be back in the evening, and will give us a clear picture of what happened—the whole story how he found it was Orne, the beast! At Dad's house, at nine," Linda reported. And then broke into pean about said "Dad," and praising the absent Tyler McVane, who had so cleverly planned their reunion "without breaking his promise to mother never to tell Dad of my escape." Going on from there to drawing glowing pictures of the future in which she shared a Park Avenue penthouse with her father—and, it seemed, Bill Parris—after having risen to Broadway stardom in my play, the phenomenal success of which she took for granted.

All very rosy if uncertain, and welcome only because it made the time pass—to nine o'clock. (To be continued.)

Plan Training Program For Pre-Draft Age Boys

(By Associated Press.) WASHINGTON, March 4.—A broad expansion of short-term specialized college training for boys under military-draft age, at Army Navy expense, was announced today.

The training, beamed at 17-year-olds, would be in the nature of preparation for induction into the armed forces, and would be limited to those who have completed high school work and who have not yet registered for Selective Service.

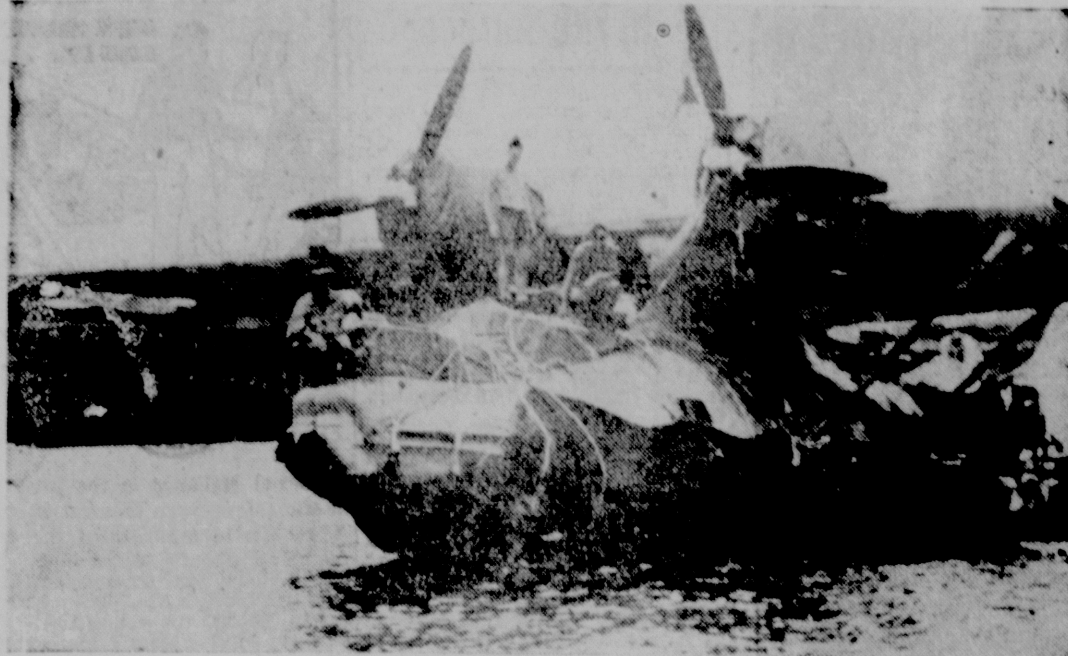

A joint Army-Navy announcement avoided any estimate of the number to be sent to institutions of higher learning. However, college officials have estimated possibly 100,000 might be eligible. Tests for acceptability will be held March 15.

The announcement said the new program was designed to "replace some of the loss" which will result from curtailment of the present Army Specialized Training program, designed for those of induction age. Due to withdrawal to active duty, ASTP will be reduced from 145,000 to about 35,000 by April 1.

Boxcars In the Sky

Army's Flying Freights Are Delivering Goods To Allied Forces Around World

By WILLIAM MCGAFFIN (Former Chief of The Associated Press Bureau at Cairo)

Flying boxcars nonchalantly now make their way daily literally to the ends of the earth on the world's longest freight line, carrying passengers and the sinews of war to the distant battlefronts of this global conflict.

The sinews capable of being flown by this extraordinary service which is operated by the Air Transport command of the United States Army might surprise you. I have seen, for example, a two-engine transport no bigger than the ordinary peace-time airliner open its barn-door-like sides and calmly swallow a whole jeep.

Miscellaneous Cargo

You can drive a jeep into the Army's flying boxcars, you can fill them with belly tanks (extra gas tanks for fighters needing more range on combat missions) or you can pack in airplane motors or maybe just a lot of cigars and shaving cream for the boys over there. It makes no difference what the load; the old winged freighter takes it in her stride.

I know a little about this wonderful service for I have flown its course at different times from Chungking clear to New York. Just recently I came 12,900 miles from Cairo by way of Khartoum, the Gold Coast, Ascension Island (desolate place in mid-Atlantic and until recently a hush-hush spot), Brazil, Trinidad, Porto Rico and Miami. Youngsters who had never been out of the mid-west before were our pilots on this fantastic trip across desert, sea and jungle, through strange and storied lands.

No Plush Seats

It was not a comfortable trip. The only time we had what they call "plush seats"—that is, regular seats such as peacetime airliners used—was when we hopped the drink one dark December night. (You cross the equator twice, incidentally, and the sensation from that height is, like the line of the equator on schoolroom globes, entirely imaginary.) The rest of the time we sat on a "bucket seat"—an aluminum sort of park bench that ran down either side of the plane.

It was about as comfy as riding a mule bareback. When you leaned back you inevitably creased the back of your neck on a sharp iron ledge which in peacetime would be covered with wallboard. Without the wallboard insulation, the roar of the engines and the swish of the air ropes rattling in to you. It's sometimes reminiscent of the rattle and rush of a speeding freight train.

At night, when you're not flying, you're stopping in an efficiently run camp which has modern plumbing and a movie no matter how primitive the surroundings. It's usually an outdoor movie so you have to beware of malaria-bearing mosquitoes. At Accra, they take them so seriously they won't let you in to the movie unless you're wearing a tie and mosquito boots and carry a bottle of mosquito repellent. Halfway through the picture they stop it and voice over the loudspeaker requesting you to "please reapply your mosquito repellent."

Next day, at dawn, you're back on the bucket seat again, wondering why you ever started this blankety-blank trip. Certainly you don't travel for comfort these days, or for fun. You travel, like the freight you ride with, because you've got to get somewhere in a hurry. And you're darned lucky to be aboard—and know it.

Hazardous Stretch

The dangers of the ocean hop today are insignificant compared to those on another part of the line—the hazardous India to China stretch across the lofty Himalayas referred to in pilot's language as "The Hump."

I went across The Hump one day at 18,000 feet—without oxygen. I wondered if the pilot felt as woozy as I. How could he fly us if he did? We were over uncharted, jagged, mountain peaks then. Suddenly we found we were not alone. A Jap Zero stole up on us and cut loose with his machine guns. We got a couple of slugs in the tail—but ducked into a convenient cloud and got away. No, the pilot was not as woozy as I. He was one of the tough young breed who are setting a new record for cold, sustained courage on this Burma road of the air, this aerial lifeline to Chiang Kai-shek's long suffering land. We got there safely: we and the freight I was sitting on.

Asks British Not Limit Jews Entering Palestine

NEW YORK—Palestine is now prepared to accept and aid any number of refugees from embattled Europe, Rabbi Mayer Berlin, president of the World Mizrahi Organization, reported recently in a cable announcing his safe arrival in Jerusalem.

Berlin urged the British government to remember the battle now being fought to defeat the same enemy that has "imposed the dreaded Jewish dilemma" in acting to stop the admission of the Whim Paper, which would limit the number of Jews able to enter Palestine.

Failure to act with justice towards the Jew now is equivalent to a military and political "shot-in-camp" which has modern plumbing

"MY GOODNESS, I NEVER REALIZED YOU STILL HAD SO MUCH FURNITURE!"

The above statement was made by a lady who visited our store yesterday. Undoubtedly, some one had told her that "you couldn't get this" . . . and someone else "you couldn't get that" . . . and then after passing from one person to another it's finally . . . "You know, you just can't find anything you want," etc. etc. Well, it's no wonder this lady was truly surprised when she visited our store and found exactly what she wanted.

We are not attempting to imply that our stock is again at its pre-war level, because it is not. In fact it is far from it, but . . . we do want you to know that

WE HAVE A NICE STOCK OF GOOD FURNITURE

In some cases, it's here today and gone tomorrow . . . and then back in stock again a little later on. Some less needed items are not being manufactured at all, but the "over all" situation is not as bad as you might have been led to believe. Why not pay this store a visit and see for yourself?

Describes Attack On Hospital Ship

(By United Press)
AKRON—A barbaric act of war was revealed recently by an Akron Army nurse who was aboard an American hospital ship when it was bombed by a German plane off Italy.

Lieut. Blanche Sigman, recounting her adventures in a letter to her mother, says she was with the 95th evacuation hospital unit when the Nazi let loose his bombs of death "though we were brightly lighted with white, red and green lights," a hospital ship designation.

"The girls (other nurses) acted wonderfully. The sailors said they never could have saved us if we had become hysterical," she said.

The nurses were literally blown out of their bunks, Lieut. Sigman wrote. Many ran frightened through steam up to the deck completely without clothing. Some jumped naked over the side of the boat. One girl was wrapped only in a sheet.

"By some miracle none of the American girls was killed, but some of the British nurses and doctors perished."

"Nurses," Lieut. Sigman said, "who were living in a ward over which a bomb exploded were not seriously injured, though covered with debris. . . . Many of the lifeboats on deck were damaged and unusable."

"When we finally reached the water by sliding down the rope ladders, many of us had severe rope burns. We found 75 packed into one lifeboat. The bomb had punctured one end of the boat and we used helmets to bail out the water."

Rescued a short time later, the nurses and doctors were taken aboard a nearby hospital ship to North Africa.

Pittsburgh Soldier, Quads' Father, Hopes For Early Marriage

LONDON, March 4.—Staff Sgt. William Thompson, Jr., of Pittsburgh, declared in writing last night his fatherhood of the quadruplets born to unmarried Norah Carpenter, an English girl.

A medium sized man with a small pale mustache and light red hair, Thompson said he hoped "that Norah and I will be left alone now."

"Norah and I are not married but we hope to be," he said at European headquarters of the United States Army, adding "we always will stick together and do all we can for the children, because we understand each other and are not ashamed."

Thompson expressed desire the babies be registered in his name and declared he intended to "support them and their mother from this day onward."

He said he had written his wife, Eleanor, in Pittsburgh about Norah and had asked for a divorce.

"My wife must understand it was all a mistake and that our marriage, which occurred soon after I joined the Army, was hasty and thoughtless under the stress of wartime excitement," the sergeant said.

(In Pittsburgh last night, Mrs. Mary Jennemann, mother of the 26-year-old beautician whom Thompson married there in 1942, declared "we're not going to take any steps until this thing dies down."

(The daughter, a Catholic, indicated several days ago she would not allow a divorce. The soldier's father, William H. Thompson, Sr., said he hoped to see her and ask that she "free Billy, give him a divorce so he can marry the English lady and give their children a name."

The American soldier came to London after a brief visit with Norah at Hensor in Derbyshire. He learned only after his arrival in the capital that the youngest of the four babies, MacDonald, had died yesterday.

Michael, Maureen, and Madeline, the three surviving quadruplets, were reported this morning "progressing normally."

Thompson's statement was typewritten. He himself awkwardly handed it to newspapermen.

Sours Urges Formula Allocation of Road Funds by Government

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Allocation of federal highway funds on a formula basis safeguards against special interest pressures, says Hal G. Sours, Ohio director of highways.

Addressing the house roads committee yesterday in support of a proposed $3,000,000,000 post-war highway building and repair program, the Ohioan declared:

"We want to impress the fact that federal aid highway funds should be allocated by formula rather than on the so-called need basis. We recognize the formula method may result in some inequities. On the other hand such inequities as may arise would not compare with those which could arise under the need plan. . . .

"Under the formula method of allocating funds the members of Congress are spared from pressure groups and condemnation which might result when the congressmen does not produce the needed funds for some favored project in his district."

"The most universal use of our highways directly and indirectly by everyone in their everyday lives makes it important that the allocation of funds be on a well defined, fair and equitable plan subject to such well regulated changes as may be adequately provided for by law."

Sours asked that special consideration be given to urban problems, suggesting a special formula be devised for distribution of funds to be used in and around communities of 10,000 population or more.

The bill (H.R. 2426) under consideration would allocate funds according to the following formula: One-half on a basis of population; one-fourth on a basis of area; one-fourth on a basis of post-road mileage.

Sours said this formula showed a greater recognition of the importance of population than have similar bills in the past, but suggested it be applied only to areas outside urban centers, and that a special urban formula be drawn.

Sen. Harold H. Burton (R-Ohio) who listened to Sours' presentation, told the committee he believed a project such as the bill proposes would help prevent a postwar depression.

WE WORK FOR VICTORY TOO!

AAA

Eternal vigilance is the price of traffic safety when crossing streets. A. P. Morris, manager of the Columbiana County Motor club, declared today in announcing distribution of AAA-OSAA March safety posters to schools, to aid teachers in classroom safety education work.

"The importance of waiting on the curb until traffic goes by, and looking in all directions, especially for turning cars, is emphasized in the colorful poster which is one of the WE WORK FOR VICTORY, TOO series furnished this year to schools as part of the club's civic safety program," he said.

"Many traffic fatalities result from failure of pedestrians to make a momentary stop at the curb line and look both ways to see how close approaching cars are. Few pedestrians—children or adults—realize that if a car is moving 25 miles an hour it will go the full car length every time a man takes a step. Children in school are taught the large differences between their speed and that of moving vehicles."

"The new poster," Morris added, "introduces the novel idea of older boys aiding police and traffic authorities by constructing stencils and painting safety slogans on sidewalks, especially in school areas, where large numbers of persons cross. Such warnings are particularly effective because they are pertinent at the point of danger."

"You're giving to me when you give to the Red Cross!"

ELEVEN million men in the services—but one alone whose name you never forget—one alone for whom you would do anything, give anything.

Through every dreary day you are buoyed up by thoughts of him. The long lonely nights are a little less lonely when you can read his letters, see his picture upon your bedside table.

And yet there is so little you can do for him. If only you could be sure of helping him when he needs you most.

But you can be sure. For you give to him when you give through your Red Cross.

Wherever he may be stationed . . . in camp or abroad, in desert, in jungle or icy waste, the Red Cross is at his side. Your Red Cross is there with "coffee and" when he finishes a long exhausting march.

Your Red Cross is there when he is lonely and lost in some strange city on leave.

Your Red Cross provides hostels, canteens, "a bed with clean sheets," cheer, comfort and companionship for him no matter where he may be.

Well or wounded, your Red Cross is at his side. The blood you gave goes to him, thanks to your Red Cross. His convalescence is made easy with books and games and gifts from a Red Cross worker.

If he is a prisoner of war, your Red Cross will, to the utmost of its power, get your letters in to him, get his letters out to you, and straight from your heart, the Red Cross will send him real American food, cigarettes and tobacco.

Wherever he is—wherever he may go—he will never be out of your reach. For you give to him when you give through the Red Cross.

Of course, you have given before. Of course, you will give again.

But this year when the need is greater than ever . . . when it's your own men we serve . . . This year dig deeper than you have ever dug before and be glad that you can. For wherever he is

Salem And Lisbon High Teams Clash In Tourney Tonight

QUAKERS FAVORED TO DEFEAT RIVALS FROM COUNTY SEAT

Game at Youngstown South Field House Is Scheduled for 8 P. M.

For tussle number two in tournament play this year, the Salem Quakers are stacked against a tough, improved, and determined Lisbon Blue Devil squad which boasts a season's record of 15 wins against five losses and will be out to stay in tournament competition tonight, when the two squads meet in the second round of the sectional-district basketball tournament at Youngstown South's field house at 8 p. m.

Three other frays are on the bracketed Youngstown Ursuline against Campbell Memorial at 6, Scienceville and Warren at 7, and two Canton squads, Tinken and Lincoln, in the final at 9 p. m.

In spite of the Lisbon record, the Blue Devil toughness, and their determination, the Quakers are picked to win over their county seat foes. Lisbon's record, though impressive at a glance, has been compiled against competition decidedly inferior to that faced by the progressing Quakers. Jack Mills, new Lisbon mentor and former Mount Union star, has three letters on his squad, but has lost one valuable player, Ed Mullens, to the Marines last month.

Salem Holds Edge

Lisbon's record of 15 wins came in most cases over Tri-County league opponents, most of whom are in Class B ratings. Columbiana, Chester, W. Va., Struthers, and Salem accounted for the five losses. Columbiana defeated the Blue Devils twice this year with ease—once in Lisbon and once in Columbiana—and Salem's pair of decisive wins over the Clippers gives them a good edge in the fray tonight.

Coch Herb Brown's squad will be entering their second engagement on tournament grounds, and the Salem coach believes this second game may show them better than the first. The tournament "ice" is broken, and Brown expects Salem to settle down to their regular and improved brand of ball handling.

Norm Smith, who looked exceptionally good in the Minerva game Thursday, will no doubt see lots of action tonight. Smith did an excellent job around the backboards and dumped through a pair of beautiful long shots on the big floor in the initial tourney test.

The starting combination of Flick Enrikken, Mutt Schaeffer, Walt Brian, Francis Lannoy, and Jimmie Appediss will probably begin the contest against Mills' regular starting crew. Lisbon will use Bill Weitzell, Jim Pendry, Dave Arter, Jim Berry, and Earl Lenz against the Quakers at the start, with Mike Smith and Joe Chan slated for work.

The winner of the game tonight will advance to the semi-finals next Friday and will tackle the victor in the Lincoln-Tinken affair at 9 o'clock.

CHANEY WINS FROM YOUNGSTOWN SOUTH 50 TO 30 IN BIG UPSET

Canton Lehman and Canton Township Win Second Round Tilts Friday

Youngstown Chaney High school scored the surprise upset of the sectional-district basketball tournament last night by downing Youngstown South, one of the four seeded teams in the meet, 50-30. Seeded Canton Lehman, and two other Canton teams, McKinley and Canton Township, took their second round frays with comparative ease. Fans jammed the Youngstown South High field house where the games were played.

The Youngstown city champs, who had been beaten once before by Chaney gathered in an early lead to cling to it defiantly throughout the cheer-rocked battle.

Carmen DiMuzio, big Chaney center, was red hot under the basket and collected an amazing 22 points to be closely followed by teammate Ong with 16. Chaney led by quarters 11-5, 22-15, 35-24, and closed with 15 points in the final while South could only manage six. The victory sends Chaney on to meet Canton McKinley in the semi-finals at 9 p. m. next Thursday.

Take Early Lead

McKinley gained a chance in the semi-finals by downing an outclassed Girard squad 56-26. The Canton Bulldogs had no trouble building up an early lead and went on to double their total in the second half. Canton had skipped the first round by virtue of a bye and Girard previously knocked Louisville out 37-35.

Powerful Canton Lehman presented another exhibition of power polytechnics last night by whitewashing their Stark county rivals, Alliance, 58 to 26. Lehman led 18-10 at the first quarter, 31-19 by half-time, 47-21 at the close of the third. Alliance only tallied seven points in the final half. Lehman advances another notch in their bracket to meet Canton Township at 8 p. m. Thursday.

In the other game Canton Township made it three Canton winners for the evening by eliminating a hard-fighting Brookfield team 39-29. Canton had problems most of the way but stepped on in the last half to lead after holding just a two point advantage 11-9 as the first quarter closed. Brookfield tied it 20-20 by halftime but slipped seven points behind, 31-24, as the final began. Brookfield had eliminated Youngstown Wilson Wednesday in an upset to earn the right to meet Canton. Canton drew a bye in the first round.

Last night's games completed the second round in the narrowing A and B brackets. Now, of the 13 teams which started to play in those brackets, just four remain. The four, Canton Township, Lehman, McKinley and Youngstown Chaney, will settle things one step further Thursday to sift the picture winner of the final class wins the down to a pair of finalists. The right to go to Regional competition at South on March 18-19, with a champ from the C and D brackets, who complete their second round play-offs tonight in four games at the field house.

Hornsby Turns Baseball Savvy The Mexican Way

AP Features

FORT WORTH, Tex. — Rogers Hornsby is going to turn his baseball talents to building the game in Mexico.

It's just the sort of job the Rajah likes, teaching the youngsters how to play and at the same time furthering the sport in virgin territory. With the Texas League idle, Hornsby, a member of baseball's Hall of Fame, has accepted a one year contract to manage the Vera Cruz club in the Mexican League.

However, the signs say that he will be more than just the manager of a club that plays only three days a week. It appears Hornsby will work generally toward improving the game in that country south of the border.

His tentative plan is to operate a baseball school there in addition to his duties as manager of the Vera Cruz club which uses Mexico City as its home base. That would mean four days a week to devote to his school.

Hornsby for years operated a spring clinic for youngsters who wanted to break into professional ball. He did the same thing at Fort Worth where he is general manager of the local club that holds membership in the now suspended Texas League.

The Rajah, one of the greatest players ever to perform in the majors, says he will not make a decision until the Texas League decides whether it will

Whether Mr. Roosevelt will stand for a fourth term nomination is a question most party spokesmen say will surely be answered in the affirmative at convention time, although no inkling one way or the other has come from the President.

His substitution of a win-the-war slogan for the New Deal, the Baruch report laying great emphasis on "free enterprise" after the war, the replacement of most all of the original "brain trusters" with advisers classed as more "conservative"—all have led some in the Democratic party to say he is leaning more to the right on domestic matters.

Some opponents have contended these so-called "rightist" tendencies will last only until many conservatives are "enticed" back to his banner.

Non-Fathers Above Draft Age Proposed For Special Details

(By Associated Press)

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Undaunted by sidetracking of a similar bill and impatient because of "too much talking and too little action," Rep. Clare Boothe Luce (R-Conn.) offered a new solution to the manpower problem today.

She introduced legislation to induct into the Army, for limited service in essential war activities, between 50,000 and 200,000 men who would be non-fathers between the ages of 28 and 45 of 4-Fs between 18 and 38.

The men, inducted through Selective Service, would be assigned to the Army, receive regular army pay and wear army uniforms.

They would be used for harvesting, mining, logging, tanning, and other seasonal activities, and in essential war and war-supporting jobs.

"It's time to stop talking and do something," Mrs. Luce said in an interview. "So far, all congress has done on the manpower problem is to state what cannot be done."

Mrs. Luce said she did not believe congress was in the mood to enact a national service law nor did she think the house military committee, of which she is the only woman member, had any intention of considering a bill she introduced some time ago to create a non-uniformed emergency work corps through wholesale induction of draft-age non-fathers not already in uniform.

The matter of pay for the men inducted and assigned to work under her bill would be left to the army to work out, but presumably the difference between the army compensation paid to the soldier-worker and the prevailing wage rate for the job he does would go to the Treasury.

Tests made by Illinois Institute of Technology and sponsored by Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. on a "solar house" built prior to the war-time construction ban have revealed that the rays of the sun, filtering through multiple-glazed windows—which sandwich a dehydrated air space between two panes of plate glass with a metal-to-glass seal—supplied as much heat each sunny winter day as would one-twentieth of a ton of coal.

Actually, the year's test proved that the occupants' fuel bill was pared 40 per cent by employing the sun's rays as an auxiliary heating unit.

EAST LIVERPOOL, March 4.—Funeral service will be held here Tuesday for Mrs. Hazel Martin, 21, a soldier's bride of three weeks who died unexpectedly in a Fayetteville, N. C., hospital. Sun Rays Help to Heat Post-War Solar House

CHICAGO—The living room of the postwar house may never be adorned with a 100-pound pile of burning coal—but there's a possibility that its equivalent in heat will be deposited there each winter day by the sun.

Tests made by Illinois Institute of Technology and sponsored by Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. on a "solar house" built prior to the war-time construction ban have revealed that the rays of the sun, filtering through multiple-glazed windows—which sandwich a dehydrated air space between two panes of plate glass with a metal-to-glass seal—supplied as much heat each sunny winter day as would one-twentieth of a ton of coal.

Actually, the year's test proved that the occupants' fuel bill was pared 40 per cent by employing the sun's rays as an auxiliary heating unit.

The War Today

By DeWitt MacKenzie

fighter power is now in the west, stand off the Anglo-American slaughter.

British experts estimate the Nazi fighter strength at 2,000 front line planes, and the Allies must render that big air Navy impotent. We must rule the air against the day when our surface armada pours our boys onto the heavily defended beaches of the English channel for the invasion which is calculated to end the war.

Fortunately the American and British home-fronts—equally important with the fighting fronts—finally have equipped our air navy in Britain so that we can go on well all-out in our aerial air. Our forces are growing and a weather improves our assault. Increase in number and intensity.

We are in the midst of the most gigantic battle that the air ever has known. It's something that agile minds have dreamed of, but never before have seen.
